

Feeder Bandit

by Darlene Showers

One sunny morning, the squirrel known throughout the neighborhood as the "Feeder Bandit" was at it again.

With light-footed paws and a naughty look in its eye, the furry thief made his way to the bird feeder hanging from the old oak tree.

The squirrel carefully plotted its next move as the colorful birds chirped happily nearby, unaware of the squirrel's plan to rob the feeder.

With a swift leap, it landed on the feeder, causing it to sway back and forth, sending seeds in all directions.

The birds whistled in protest, but the squirrel paid them no mind, too focused on the seeds.

With quick movements, it scooped up mouthfuls of seeds, stuffing them into its cheeks.

Just as the feeder was almost emptied, a brave blue jay swooped down, determined to defend its territory.

The bluejay chased the squirrel, but the squirrel jumped to the grass.

In the end, the squirrel quickly escaped with the seeds, disappearing into the branches.

And so, the legend of the Feeder Bandit grew, leaving the birds to wonder when the daring thief would strike again.
